KUALA LUMPUR: The National Cooperative Movement of Malaysia Bhd (Angkasa) distributed 300 iftar food packs to all Media Prima staff at Balai Berita Bangsar here, today.

Angkasa deputy president Datuk Abdul Rahman Abdul Razak Shaik said this was Angkasa's way of expressing appreciation to media personnel who have given their highest commitment in carrying out the responsibility of delivering the news to all Malaysians.

"We want to thank the media for their continuous support in delivering the latest information on Angkasa and the development of the national cooperative movement throughout 100 years of Malaysian families' socio-economic progress.

"Hopefully, the cooperation between Angkasa and the New Straits Times Press (NSTP) will be further strengthened in the future."

He added that Angkasa will continue to provide its services in order to help those in need of medical care, education and basic necessities.

"Since 2020, we have spent up to RM3 million and assisted around 70,000 families in the country.

"This initiative is in line with our principles which are to help one another and to ensure the welfare of the community," he said.

Also present were NSTP marketing, communications and sales support general manager Datuk Ahmad Zaini Kamaruzzaman and Harian Metro group editor Husain Jahit.
